THE WHITE FAMILY

Except for the difference in names and a variance of a few years in dates this could be the story of any of thousands of families who migrated across New England to settle in Western New York in the early nineteenth century. By 1635 new communities were being established along the coast of Massachusetts and settlement westward had begun. Whole groups from an established town would move westward to a new site and a new community would be set up.

In 1635 Hingham, Massachusetts was settled by a group of some thirty families who had come from "Old Hingham" in England.[1] Weymouth was also established the same year.[2] In 1762 Chesterfield, Massachusetts was established, being incorporated from the New Plantation called "New Hingham." [3]

By 1800 those who had settled in western Massachusetts were feeling the push and the search for new places to settle filled the minds of adventuresome people. By the 1830's western New York was no longer the frontier and again the movement westward occurred much in the same manner as the previous ones had. With ensuing generations the process has repeated itself until the whole of the United States has become settled. Again and again, as one reads through the genealogies of the early New England settlers this story repeats itself so that the story of one is the story of all -- except for the different names and the varying dates of personal events.

Wessaguscus became Weymouth, Massachusetts in 1635.[4] It is here we find the first reference to Thomas White. He was born in England about 1599 as in 1659 he called himself "Aged about sixty." He was made a freeman of the Massachusetts Bay Colony 3 March, 1635/6 and was a deputy in 1636, 1637, 1657 and 1670. His will was made on the fifth of July and probated 28 August, 1679. Thus his death occurred between these dates. There is no mention of a wife. His children living at the date of his will and probably all born in Weymouth are the following.[5]

Her father Nicholas Phillips was born in 1611 in Wendover Bucks, England and was of Dedham, Massachusetts in 1636. Ebenezer and Hannah

The White Family is typical of the early settlers in this area. Then, as now, people were always looking for the greener pastures beyond the next hill. And so it is even today our children leave this area to find jobs in their specialized fields of training. How many LeRoyans now living are direct male descendants from early settlers? I suspect many can show descent through daughters and granddaughters of the rugged people who came into this area from 1797 until about 1830. There are probably no descendants of Joel White here now, but of the descendants of his brother Phineas there are many.
